BY TELEGRAPH. MIDNIGHT DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON. Washington, December 9.—The Committee on Reconstruction held a meeting this morning on the subject of the admission of Virginia. The meeting continued two hours. Eight or ten speeches were made by Radicals and Conservations of the members of the tives from Virginia and the members of the committee. Some wanted the iron-clad oath administered to the legislators, while others contended that an oath to support the Constitution of the United States is sufficient. The committee ad-ionated to most part Saturday, at which journed to meet next Saturday, at which time the contending parties are required

Breach of Promise of Marriage-

In the Court of Exchequer, London, on Wednesday, November 3, an action for breach of promise of marriage—Payne vs. Smith—was heard.

The plaintiff, Ann Payne, said she was

The plaintiff, Ann Payne, said she was fifty five years of age, and refused to acknowledge fifty-nine. She had been for a good many years, according to counsel's opening, housekeeper to a Mr. Berry, a married man, living near Hemel, Hempstead; but in cross examination she admitted that she did all the house-hold labor, and was in a manner. "a sershe admitted that she did all the house-hold labor, and was in a manner "a ser-vant of all work." The defendant, James Smith, had been a blacksmith in the same town, and had reached the age of seventy-five. It seemed that he was still a back-lor, and that, as regarded means, he was pretty well off, owning a farm of about system acres, and having $1000.

Panis, December 9.—The bullion in promise, and he said he said he would not marry her until they died. She had been with him in a cottage occupied by one of his tenants. He gave her to all business entrusted to our care.

Panis, December 9.—The bullion in promise, and he said he sai sometimes, but seldom. At different times he had given her sums amounting to twenty pounds. Mr. Berry, in whose service she lived, died fifteen or sixteen years ago, and she then went to live with her mother. Her wages were fourteen pounds a year. Within the last foar years she had not seen the defendant very often. Last summer she asked him why he did net marry her, and he said that he was too old to marry; that he had got a housekeeper that suited him very well, and that he did not wish to make any change. Some years before he said he would never have any one else but the plaintiff, and she replied, "I never will have any one else as long as but the plaintiff, and she replied, "I never will have any one else as long as never will have any one else as long as you live."

Mrs. Dickinson, a widow, residing at Keusington Park road, said: In June last she went to the defendant and saked him why he did not marry Ann Payne. He said he must break off the connection as he did not want to marry. She replied that Ann Payne was not likely to get settled at her time of life, and that the least he could do was to have her as a housekeeper. She also told him that the plaintiff would not let the matter drop. In cross-examination the witness said that on the occasion of the interview she served the writ in this action upon the defendant; she went down to Hemel-Hempstead for that purpose. The clerk of the plaintiff's solicitors had got offices temporarily in the house.
